COTTON MARKETS

Continued Pressure and Little Support Brings Further Sharp Decline.

Monday Afternoon. Dec. ...

Further easiness was shown by the speculative cotton market today, and from the spot department there came nothing which semed to ofter much encouragement to bullish efforts. The decline up to a short while before the close was approximately $7.50 a hale from the high level made just after the opening, the latter having come without much explanation and lasting but a few minutes. It was reported that a threatened investigation by the bureau of markets into the character of the recent selling which has broken the market so much was responsible the market so much was responsible for some of the temporary display of strength.

The general situation appears very much the same as it has been There is but little news coming to hand to influence values and in most circles apparently there is acceptance of the theory that commedity values must work lower. That cotton should be no exception is evidently the view of the people who for the time being are nominating trading. The accurity markets are not so weak as catton, yet

On the surface there was little to indicate that anxiety prevailed, yet there was probably much of it. Buyers were helding off and the weather conditions were such as to help enlarge the supply. Opinion, however, seemed influenced but little by estimates.
